Speciation of solids from mine or geothermal sites. The solids were extracted with solutions (F1 - F5) of increasing strength. Extracting solution F5 is a strong acid. From Bloom, 2002. to recover mercury primarily from naturally occurring Of greatest significance was the verification that the mine-site-derived solids are approximately 20 times less organic matter. Most of the extracted mercury from the actual bioavailable for methylation than is dissolved mercury mine-pile materials was recovered only with the F5 fraction, (Hg). This observation is supported by the speciation which is a strong acid. In contrast, extraction of mercury from profiles, which showed that these solids have more than the sediments of the tributary sites tended to occur more 90 percent of the mercury present as cinnabar-like readily with the F3 fraction (fig. 6).
